Stylemaker Thomas Lavin's (thomaslavin.com) global cache of exclusive, high-end furniture, fabric and lighting has grown so much that the space itself required a revamp and refresh. Now, the eponymous showroom at West Hollywood's Pacific Design Center is topped off with 4,000 more square feet for a whopping 17,000-square-foot total footprint. It's roomy enough to showcase two new brands: furniture designer Joseph Jeup of Grand Rapids, Mich., and English textile designer James Malone of Malaga, Spain. Also on deck is furniture by Alexander Purcell Rodrigues and fabrics by Tibor, Nine Muses and Philippe David. "We wanted to showcase our collections in a more luxurious and spacious environment," says Lavin. "We also wanted to highlight some of our best-kept secrets."

Psst: Among them are rugs from Rosemary Hallgarten ($105 to $118 per square foot) and Christopher Farr ($68 to $210 per square foot), as well as bespoke bedding and finished goods from C & C Milano. Don't miss the chance to check out the brand's new collaboration with L.A. gallerist Edward Cella as well. —Wendy Bowman

Eye-catching patternwork from designer James Malone tops off the latest treasures available from Thomas Lavin's expanded showroom. From left: Formosa fabric and Yanaka wallpaper; Benahavis fabric and Yara wallpaper; Henri fabric and wallpaper.

VIVA L'ITALIA! Scooping up the finest Italian-made furniture just got even easier as Italian design brand Poltrona Frau (poltronafrau.com) relocates to a larger space in West Hollywood, adjoining new-to-the-West Coast brand Luminaire. The 4,300-square-foot space boasts a wraparound glass facade that frames its celebrated heritage leatherwork to perfection—in fact, there's an entire area now dedicated to just that. Stop in to ogle key lines like Ludovica + Roberto Palomba's Let It Be modular sofa system, as well as the first accessories collection for the brand, The Objects. Showroom manager Nicola Coropulis also hints about newness from Neri & Hu, Roberto Lazzeroni and GamFratesi—fresh from debuts at IMM Cologne—arriving this month. Fantastico! —Kelly Phillips Badal
